What's Ahead for Virtual Assistants in Healthcare?

Harry Pappas could hardly believe his ears. It was almost five years ago when he encountered the black, cylindrical speaker, crowned with a ring of blue light. The device took voice commands and returned just about anything a user wanted. “Alexa, tell me the weather in Athens, Greece,” Pappas demanded, eager to test the virtual assistant’s limits. He received the forecast in seconds and then requested a Vivaldi composition. His mind jumped to virtual assistants in healthcare.

PARTNERSHIP WITH A PURPOSE

Expanding the Reach of Critical Care

As the COVID-19 pandemic ravages the world, and hospitals struggle with Intensive Care Units (ICUs) at capacity, the pre-pandemic shortage of critical care specialists, nurses and other clinicians has become an even greater issue globally.¹
